

Phnom Penh in pictures:

The best places to eat Phnom Penh are the street side restaurants and markets. The fish soups are amazing. A soup, meat and vegetable dish with rice and all you can drink ice tea costs between 50 and 75 cents. The only catch is you have to time your meals to coincide with locals or else you get the cold dregs of what no one else wanted.

I spend a lot of time just wondering the markets there is always a lot going on and you are never far from a tasty snack although the smell is not always so pleasant.

Very fresh chicken for sale.

Mangos are in season and there are fruit vendors on almost every corner and in the many city's many surprisingly well maintained parks

There are a lot of homeless and destitute people in Phnom Penh, here a man sleeps under the shelter of the “Independence Monument.”

Protect your life-Drive safely and smoke Marlboro.

Young boy waits on a motor bike in front of a Ferris wheel in Phnom Penh.

Procession, I believe marking the Buddha's birthday. At least when I tried to look it up on the internet later that was the only thing that matched up.

Procession passing in front of the Independence monument, Phnom Penh.

Independence monument,
Phnom Penh.